

Resampling based procedures are ways to perform population based statistical inferences, while living within our data. Data Scientists tend to really like resampling based inferences, since they are very data centric procedures, they scale well to large studies and they often make very few assumptions.